

Machine Learning is a branch of Artificial Intelligence.

It allows computers to learn patterns from data and make predictions or decisions without being explicitly programmed for every individual task.

The three common types of machine learning are supervised learning, unsupervised learning, and reinforcement learning.

Supervised learning uses labelled data. Unsupervised learning finds patterns in data without labelled outputs. Reinforcement learning learns through rewards and penalties.