

Python is a high-level, interpreted programming language. It is widely used for web development, automation, data science, artificial intelligence, machine learning, and scripting.

Python uses simple and readable syntax. It supports multiple programming styles including procedural, object-oriented, and functional programming.

Python provides many built-in libraries and also has a large collection of third-party packages.